

Table of Contents

- Attack on seven Iranian Christians exposes religious minorities' 'extreme vulnerability' in refugee camps
- 25 May 1993 – 25 May 2018 : 25th anniversary of Kokkinakis case, the first religious freedom case ruled by the European Court
- Report on religious education
- End of separate Sharia law for Muslims
- 'Historic step': Greek PM hails change to limit power of sharia law

Attack on seven Iranian Christians exposes religious minorities' 'extreme vulnerability' in refugee camps

World Watch Monitor (10.07.2018) - <https://bit.ly/2u9Sw3u> - Five Christian converts and two children from Iran were attacked last month in a refugee camp in Greece and told to leave as "this is a Muslim camp".

Following the incident, which took place on Sunday 24 June in a camp near the city of Larissa, about 360km northwest of the capital Athens, an aid worker says there should be more protection for religious minorities among refugees as they are "extremely vulnerable".

Religious minorities currently comprise approximately 2-4% of the total refugee population arriving on Europe's shores, according to Yochana Darling, British founder of the International Christian Consulate (ICC), which supports Christian refugees in the camps in Greece.

Often they have fled violence and persecution in their home countries, only to discover that once in the camps, or other refugee accommodation, they are still being targeted because of their faith, Darling explained in an interview with World Watch Monitor.

"All the other minority groups are considered to be in need of protection, but religious minorities are by and large off peoples' radars ... There is a need for more awareness ... and there should be recognition of problems that [they] face in the camps, especially converts," she said.

Darling has been working with Christian refugees in Greece for the last two years and says the camps are "microcosms of the Middle East, so all the same ethnic and religious tensions exist and, in many ways, are intensified in the camps. Violence is a regular occurrence".

Research conducted by the ICC shows that "88% of all Christian refugees have experienced or witnessed faith-based persecution and discrimination at the hands of extremist Islamists in their home countries, en-route to Europe, and, significantly, continue to do so in Europe's refugee accommodation".

Among them are Hamid and Fatimah*, and their three-year-old daughter.

Two years ago they travelled from Iran to Turkey, where they became Christians at a church in Istanbul. "While in Iran they had been given a Bible secretly and were keen to convert but too scared to do it in their home country, where apostates can be executed.

They stayed in Turkey for four months before continuing their journey to Serbia, where they were for ten months,” Darling explained.

“Things were really bad there,” she said, “including threats because of their conversion.” But here they met another couple, also travelling with a young child, who had fled Iran because of threats from their family due to their conversion to Christianity.

“Amir and Mahsan had been secretly studying the Bible together in Iran, when they were discovered by some family members who were strong Muslims and part of the Revolutionary Guard. They fled as the family were threatening to kill them,” Darling said.

After they met in Serbia, the two families left for Greece together and were picked up by Greek police and put in a camp in Thessaloniki. There they met Mustafa, another convert, though a much more recent one, according to Darling.

After a brief stay in the camp in Thessaloniki, two months ago they were moved to Larissa camp, one of the hottest and driest places in Greece.

There the two families shared a small container-cabin (called a ‘Connex’), where Mustafa would visit them to read the Bible together.

“However, others in the camp found out that there were converts among them and on 24 June, in the middle of the night, a group of about 30-40 refugees attacked the two families while Mustafa was with them. They had just returned to the camp after attending church for some more Bible-reading together.

“The attackers poured petrol over the cabin where they were meeting, and threatened to set it alight. They beat up the men and held knives to the throats of the two women and children, while telling them, ‘This is a Muslim camp. You have to leave’.

“When the refugees called in the police to come and help, they were told that they would not come as they were afraid. They were only a small number compared with the hundreds of people in the camp,” Darling said, adding that she has heard similar stories from many other refugees who have been in similar situations.

‘Completely traumatised’

One of the men who was attacked suffers from a heart condition, but the ambulance that was called in to help him initially was not allowed in, having to wait for over an hour, according to Darling.

The following morning, at 5am, the others fled the camp with the help of a group of Afghans. They went straight to their church in Larissa and asked for the pastor’s help. He contacted ICC and assisted the families with train tickets to Athens, where they were taken to ICC’s safe house.

“They arrived here completely traumatised,” said Darling. “As we do with everyone who comes to us, we interviewed and screened them to make sure that what they told us was the true story, and then offered them a place to stay. We will keep them here for a few months, focus on their immediate safety and help them to get back on their feet.”

Since it was established in 2016, the organisation has helped 65 families. This includes registering them with the UN High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) so they can start receiving aid packages. This process takes time, Darling explained, because most of the refugees entered Greece overland and crossed the border without registering themselves.

"We talk about them having to rebuild their lives and future, but the vast majority we work with don't know what a CV [resume] is Rebuilding requires back to basics. And most of them are traumatised and don't feel safe where they are. We need to deal with that first, before they can think about rebuilding."

Protection measures

Darling says the incident has been reported to both the UNHCR and the police. She says the UNHCR in Athens is gradually paying more attention to the vulnerability of religious minorities but that they "have little influence on how camps are run in Greece, so the problem still very much exists.

"Greece is under considerable strain with the refugee burden, and is doing the best it can with limited resources, but it's not really at the top of the priority list. There are no official protection measures in place specifically for religious minorities in the camps. We regularly hear stories from the camps and receive referrals because of such situations."

25 May 1993 – 25 May 2018 : 25th anniversary of Kokkinakis case, the first religious freedom case ruled by the European Court

By Willy Fautré, Human Rights Without Frontiers

HRWF (24.05.2018) - On 25 May 1993, the European Court of Human Rights held, by six votes to three, that there had been a breach of Article 9 of the European Convention (freedom of religion or belief) in the case Kokkinakis v. Greece (Application no. 14307/88).

The Kokkinakis case is a landmark judgment and a pilot case of the European Court of Human Rights. In 1993, it was the first religious freedom case with which the European Court was confronted. Its decision endorsing the fundamental right to share one's beliefs with others concerned not only Greece but all the 47 member states of the Council of Europe and their populations, around 820 million people in all. However, beyond the case, there was a man...

Beyond the court case, there was a man

I had the privilege to know Minos Kokkinakis. I met him in his apartment in Crete for an interview, I publicized his case during the lengthy proceedings in Strasbourg and I organized a press conference with him in Brussels. He was interviewed by the national Belgian television for the evening TV news and despite his age (84), he captivated the interviewer with his energy and his passion for the defence of his rights. He was a charismatic fighter for justice.

Mr Minos Kokkinakis (1909-1999), a retired shopkeeper of Greek nationality, was born into an Orthodox family at Sitia (Crete) in 1909. After becoming a Jehovah's Witness in 1936, he was arrested more than 60 times for proselytism. He was also interned and imprisoned on several occasions.

The periods of internment, which were ordered by the administrative authorities on the grounds of his activities in religious matters, were spent on various islands in the Aegean Sea (Amorgos, Milos, Makronisos...).

These periods of imprisonment, to which he was sentenced by the courts, were mainly for acts of proselytism (three sentences of two and a half months in 1939 - he was the first Jehovah's Witness to be convicted under the Laws of the Metaxas Government -, four and a half months in 1949 and two months in 1962), for conscientious objection (eighteen and a half months in 1941) and for holding a religious meeting in a private house (six months in 1952).

During the German occupation in WWII, in 1941, he was arrested as a conscientious objector. He could have been executed for that but he had a deeply rooted belief that God had prevented him, and the other Christians, from killing human beings. He was ready to die for that.

In his lifetime, Mr. Kokkinakis served a cumulative total of more than six years in prison.

On 2 March 1986 he and his wife called at the home of Mrs Kyriakaki in Sitia and engaged in a discussion with her. Mrs Kyriakaki's husband, who was the cantor at a local Orthodox church, informed the police, who arrested Mr and Mrs Kokkinakis and took them to the local police station, where they spent the night of 2-3 March 1986.

He ultimately appealed his last conviction to the ECtHR. The court issued its decision on 25 May 1993 in his favor, stating that the Greek government had breached Article 9 of the ECHR (freedom of religion).

More than ever, this case is bearing fruit, especially in post-Soviet countries where the right to share one's beliefs is more and more restricted, and criminalized. His case is a beacon in the night for all the lawyers who defend the right of believers, whatever their religion, to share their beliefs with others.

The current drama is that more and more illiberal governments in the CoE space and beyond turn a blind eye to that "disturbing court decision" and combat it in law and in practice.

Greece was the only EU country to criminalize the right to share one's beliefs

Minos Kokkinakis and his wife were prosecuted under section 4 of Law no. 1363/1938 making proselytism an offence. This law, which was adopted during the dictatorship of Metaxas (1936-40), was exclusively used to protect the Orthodox Church and was in force for more than 45 years.

In 1939, that section was amended by section 2 of Law no. 1672/1939, in which the meaning of the term "proselytism" was clarified as such:

"1. Anyone engaging in proselytism shall be liable to imprisonment and a fine of between 1,000 and 50,000 drachmas; he shall, moreover, be subject to police supervision for a period of between six months and one year to be fixed by the court when convicting the offender.

The term of imprisonment may not be commuted to a fine.

2. By 'proselytism' is meant, in particular, any direct or indirect attempt to intrude on the religious beliefs of a person of a different religious persuasion (eterodoxos), with the aim of undermining those beliefs, either by any kind of inducement or promise of an inducement or moral support or material assistance, or by fraudulent means or by taking advantage of his inexperience, trust, need, low intellect or naïvety.

3. The commission of such an offence in a school or other educational establishment or a philanthropic institution shall constitute a particularly aggravating circumstance."

More than ever, the Kokkinakis case is bearing fruit, especially in post-Soviet countries where the right to proselytize is more and more restricted, and criminalized. His case is a beacon in the night for all the lawyers who have defend the right of believers, whatever their religion, to share their beliefs with others.

The drama is that more and more illiberal governments in the CoE space and beyond turn a blind eye to that “disturbing court decision” and combat it in law and in practice.

Greek Dictator Metaxas’ spirit is back

Unfortunately, the evil spirit of Dictator Metaxas is back on the European continent...

In April 2017, Russia banned the movement of Jehovah’s Witnesses as extremist (!). Its 350 congregations and its headquarters have been declared illegal and their properties have been confiscated by the state. The 175,000 Jehovah’s Witnesses in Russia may not exercise their freedom of religion anymore, and if they do they are prosecuted. Six of them have been in custody for several months, including a Danish citizen living in Russia with his wife and their children. He has been behind bars for 1 year and is currently being tried. (See the upcoming issue of Newsweek: <http://www.newsweek.com/jehovahs-witnesses-939860> and HRWF Database of FORB Prisoners at <http://hrwf.eu/forb/forb-and-blasphemy-prisoners-list/>)

Metaxas’ anti-proselytism laws have risen from the ashes in Russia under the name of the “Varovaya laws”. They are applied in practice to members of non-Orthodox religions: not only to Jehovah’s Witnesses are being prosecuted but also Protestants now.

More reading

Court judgment: <https://bit.ly/2IMbRgw>

World news Media: <https://www.theworldnewsmedia.org/topic/30475-minos-kokkinakis/>

Independent: <https://ind.pn/2s2DGdW>

Report on religious education

By Margarita Markoviti

Exemption from Religious Education

Grassrootsmobilise Research Program (25.04.2018) - The compulsory class of religious education in Greek public schools, which is disproportionately focused on Christian Orthodoxy throughout the 9 years of its instruction, offers the option of exemption to non-Orthodox students. In primary schools religion is taught by the main class teacher, while in high schools it is taught by theologians who have graduated from either of the two Orthodox Faculties of Theology in Athens and Thessaloniki.

Article 25, part 3 of the law on “Registrations, Transfers, Attendance and Issues of Organization of School Life in Secondary Education” of November 2017 stipulates that students who wish to be exempt from the class of religion should – either themselves (in case they are over 18) or their parents – submit a formal declaration to the school authorities. The latter are responsible to then decide whether exemption should be granted, according to the relevant provisions in force. A similar procedure applies to students in primary education.

Other than setting the ground for this process, the above law makes no reference to the specific rules underpinning exemption. Such “relevant provisions” are determined and adapted by government circulars, issued by the respective Minister of Education, which serve to clarify legislative regulations, aiding the civil servants (including public school authorities) in the realization of their work. Over the last 15 years, these circulars have changed frequently, altering each time the conditions of the right to and the process of exemption. In fact, due to their regular modifications, such circulars are often referred to by the name of the respective Minister in office at the time. The main issue that is adjusted with each circular modification concerns the requirement that the students (or their parents) declare that they are not Christian Orthodox and that they reveal their religious (or other) belief as a precondition to exemption.

In 2002, under the government of the Pan-Hellenic Social Movement (PASOK), the Ministry of Education issued a circular¹ which, following a number of questions that the Education Minister, Petros Efthymiou, had received, specified that students who wish to be exempt from religious education in Greek public (secondary) schools, should submit a formal declaration, stating that they are not Christian Orthodox, without, however, declaring the religion to which they belong.

After a number of complaints by parents, the Hellenic Data Protection Authority (HDPa) – an independent body, whose decisions are binding – intervened over the issue of exemption. In the same year, the HDPa issued a decision (2), urging the Minister of Education to adjust the exemption process so that the parents who ask for exemption on behalf of their children are not obliged to also reveal their religious or other convictions. For, according to the HDPa, such an obligation of having to reveal what religion one does not belong to (a negative declaration, in other words) constitutes a breach of the protection of one’s sensitive personal data. No changes were, however, made to the “Efthymiou circular” after the HDPa’s intervention.

In July 2008, this time during the New Democracy administration, Education Minister Evripidis Stylianidis issued a circular (3) and a subsequent statement of clarification according to which “justification for refusal (to attend the class of religion) is not necessary in the exemption declaration form”. Though praised by the Greek Ombudsman, who even noticed the compatibility of the new circular with European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) jurisprudence (4) , the “Stylianidis circular” led to fierce reactions by certain Orthodox Metropolitan Bishops of the Holy Synod and by members of the Pan-Hellenic Union of Theologians, which was at the time the only trade union representing theologians who taught religion in Greek schools.

Thus, only a few weeks after the clarification statement, on August 24, 2008, Stylianidis issued a new circular that focused, this time, on the issue of the activities of students who are exempt from religious education, specifying that: “non-Orthodox students (meaning heterodox and those of other faiths), who are exempt from the class of Religion for reasons of conscience should, during the school hour of the specific subject, attend a different class of the same grade”(5). As the letter of the Greek Ombudsman to the Special Secretary on Matters of Education and Innovation noticed (6), this ambiguous statement seemed to refute the provisions of the previous circular, since it created confusion over who is entitled to ask for exemption in the first place.

Five years later, in 2013, a new circular (7) by New Democracy Minister of Education, Konstantinos Arvanitopoulos, stipulated that “exemption from the class of Religion is granted following submission of the Declaration Form [...] in which the student should either mention that he/she is not Christian Orthodox or invoke reasons of religious conscience, without the obligatory mention of the religion to which he/she belongs”. Students (or their parents) were moreover required to submit the form within 5 days from the beginning of the school year.

The 'Arvanitopoulos circular' remained in force until January 23, 2015 when, only two days before the January 2015 national elections, PASOK Education Minister, Andreas Loverdos, issued a new set of clarifications. After pressure by the Pan-Hellenic Union of Theologians (8), Loverdos altered, once again, the conditions for exemption. The 'Loverdos circular' (9) established that: "[...] non-Orthodox students, meaning heterodox or those of other faiths, are given the possibility of exemption, invoking reasons of religious conscience [...]". It specified moreover that As on some occasions [...] an exploitation of the right to exemption related to freedom of religious conscience has been observed, school directors are asked to inspect the validity of the reasons presented, stressing the gravity of the Formal Declaration to all those interested [...]. Exemption from the class of RE is granted only following submission of the Formal Declaration by the student (if he or she is an adult) or by both his parents (if he or she is a minor), which should state that the student is not Christian Orthodox and has, thus, the right to claim reasons of religious conscience, without the obligatory reference to his religion, unless he or she so wishes. The 'Loverdos circular' is still in force, in spite of occasional statements by members of the current SYRIZA administration that seemed to challenge the current rules of the exemption process. For instance, on September 25, 2015, Sia Anagnostopoulou, former Alternate Minister of Education, announced her intention to simplify the exemption process, adding that parents should be allowed to simply ask that their child does not take the class of religion, with no reference – either positive or negative – to their religion.(10) Following reactions by Archbishop Ieronymos, and though Anagnostopoulou revoked her initial position, such statements were enough to spark an ongoing debate and intense discussions between the Church and the government.

The New School of Religious Education

Parallel to the story of exemption requirements, it is important to also consider the question of the content and objectives of the religious education course. In 2011, PASOK's Education Minister, Anna Diamantopoulou, initiated the New School project, which entailed a series of reforms of the curriculum of various school subjects, including religion. The New School conceptualizes religious education as a subject that is "open and pluralistic"(11). Targeting, moreover, the denominational character of religious education and taking into consideration the changes in the country's population, the New School seeks to integrate the reality of religious diversity into the school through the study of not only the Christian traditions of Europe, but also of Judaism, Islam, Hinduism, Buddhism, Taoism and Confucianism, with a special focus on Judaism and Islam. Christianity, however, does not lose its central position in this new project, whose objective is, after all, to "build on and to broaden the already existing religious experience and understanding of students"(12). The New School was, lastly, supported by members of a new union of theologians called "Kairos". Created in 2010, the objective of "Kairos" is to promote this new approach to religious education, challenging the conservative outlook of the Pan-Hellenic Union of Theologians, which fervently opposes the New School implementation.

Since 2011, with the exception of a few voices within the Parliament, the question of the implementation of the New School program for religion had remained in abeyance.

Though evaluated through a pilot scheme until September 2014, the New School only returned to the forefront following SYRIZA's second electoral victory in September 2015(13). A month after the elections, in October 2015, former Greek Minister of Education, Nikos Filis, announced his decision to reform the class of religious education, liberating it from its mono-religious focus on Christian Orthodoxy and rendering it more pluralistic through the implementation of the New School program.

In the following months, the debate over the implementation of the New School evolved in an intense controversy between the left-wing government of SYRIZA, its right-wing, nationalist coalition partner, ANEL, and the Orthodox Church. While Archbishop Ieronymos made statements repeatedly opposing the New School program, the Pan-Hellenic Union of Theologians attacked Filis directly and asked for his resignation (14), arguing, amongst other things, that the New School program of religious education violated Article 16 of the Constitution, which establishes amongst the objectives of education “the development of students’ national and religious consciousness”(15). In April 2016, Archbishop Ieronymos held a meeting with PM Alexis Tsipras, where the former reportedly expressed his dissatisfaction with Minister Filis’ determination to alter the class of religious education (16). On September 28 of the same year, following two Ministerial Decrees(17), the Ministry of Education published the guidelines for the implementation of the new Program of Study for the class of Religion in primary school and in high school (18). The new program was meant to be implemented starting the school year 2016-2017.

In a subsequent meeting in October 2016 between Tsipras, Filis, members of the Holy Synod as well as a representative of SYRIZA’s conservative coalition partner, Panos Kammenos (Minister of Defense), the Archbishop added that such crucial questions extend beyond the scope of religious education and challenge the very foundations of the historic church-state relations in Greece (19). Only a few weeks later, on November 5, 2016, Tsipras replaced Filis with Giorgos Gavroglou in a government reshuffle. Though the new Education Minister has maintained a more moderate tone than his predecessor, he has expressed his determination to also proceed with the reform of the class of religion.

The theological unions, too, remain deeply opposed: on the one hand the members of “Kairos” seek to implement the new program and they have been participating in training seminars to prepare accordingly and, on the other, the more conservative ones, members or supporter of the Pan-Hellenic Union, who either remain skeptical or vehemently oppose the new program. While this debate is ongoing in the media, amongst politicians and theologians, the Greek Council of State issued a ruling on the specific reform of religious education. On March 20, 2018, and following the appeal of the Holy Metropolis of Piraeus (including others) who challenged the implementation of the New School of religious education, the Council of State deemed Filis’ reform of the class of religion in primary and middle school unconstitutional (Decision 660/2018). The decision stated, specifically, that the government’s plan “distorted the purpose of [religious] teaching, which is, according to the Constitution, to develop pupils’ Orthodox Christian conscience”²⁰. A month later, on April 25, the same court deemed unconstitutional and contrary to the European Convention on Human Rights the changes introduced by Filis to the way religion is taught also in high schools:

“In accordance with the constitutional principle of equality and the provisions of articles 9 and 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights, the State cannot, by regulating the content of religious course, deprive students of a particular religion of the right which it recognizes to students belonging to other religions, to teach exclusively the doctrines of their faith.” In spite of the Council of State decisions, current SYRIZA Education Minister, Giorgos Gavroglou, announced that the new program for religious education will be implemented in primary and secondary levels of education from the beginning of the 2018-2019 school year. On March 21 he stated, specifically, that the reforms will preserve “the core of Filis’ proposals” and that the government “shall not succumb to such voices of obscurantism” (21).

Papageorgiou and Others v Greece: the issues of exemption and religious education before the Strasbourg Court.

The above issues on the New Programme for religious education as well as on exemption from the class of religion are currently addressed in a case from Greece that has reached the European Court of Human Rights.

The applicants are inhabitants of two small islands in the Aegean Sea, and parents of students in primary school and high school. They complain that the content of the class of religious education is confessional, based on the instructions and demands of the Greek Orthodox Church, in a way that is neither neutral nor objective. As the applicants are not Christian Orthodox, they do not wish to follow the specific class of religion, whose character is catechetical. The procedure that the parents have to follow consists, according to the government circular, of the submission of an exemption declaration form, stating that they are not Christian Orthodox and claiming reasons of religious conscience as part of their request for exemption. The applicants argue that the fact that they have to openly declare their convictions and that the school director should then verify their declarations may lead, particularly within the small society of the islands, to the stigmatization of the student and their parents: first because it would become obvious that the latter do not follow the beliefs of the "dominant religion" and, second, because the students would be deprived of teaching hours on the basis of their religious or philosophical convictions. In their appeal, they therefore claim a violation of Articles 8 and 14 (combined), 9 and 14 (combined) and of Article 2 of Protocol no1 of the ECHR.

The applicants had moreover requested from the Council of State that their case be treated as one of absolute urgency and adjudicated before the beginning of the 2017-2018 school year (and, specifically, before the start of the school year on September 11, 2017). The Council of State, however, scheduled a hearing for October 12, 2017, which was subsequently postponed to November 9, then to December 14 and, finally, to February 8, 2018. The applicants then chose to bring the matter before the Strasbourg Court at this stage, arguing that in this case they did not have an effective national remedy. For this reason, the Rapporteur has proposed to ask a question, amongst others, concerning the exhaustion of remedies:

- In view of the successive postponements of the examination of cases by the Council of State and the unlikelihood that it will render its decision during the 2017-2018 school year, may the applicants be considered, in this case, as being exempt from exhausting the domestic remedies?
- Do the obligation of the applicant parents to declare, on their behalf, that their petitioning daughters are not Christian Orthodox so that they are granted exemption from religion courses, the retention of these statements in the school records and the investigation to be conducted by the school director about the veracity of those declarations infringe the rights of students for the respect of their private life, guaranteed by Article 8 combined with Article 14?
- Does the obligation of the applicants to disclose that their daughters are not Christian Orthodox so that they are granted exemption from religious classes violate the rights of the latter guaranteed by Article 9 combined with Article 14 (the right not to manifest their religion)?
- In fulfilling its educational functions, has the respondent State ensured that information or knowledge in the curriculum of religion classes for the school year 2017/2018 will be:
 - diffused in an objective, critical and pluralistic manner, consistent with the first sentence of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1?
 - respectful of religious and philosophical convictions of the applicant parents, in accordance with the second sentence of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1?

In the meantime, while the Council of State had agreed to finally hear the case on May 4, 2018, the hearing was postponed to an unknown date. According to the lawyer of the applicants, they will now appeal directly to the Strasbourg Court.

Margarita Markoviti, 'Greece: report on Religious Education',
Grassrootsmobilise Research Programme Report, 25 April 2018,
Available at <http://grassrootsmobilise.eu/wpcontent/uploads/2018/04/RE-Report-2.pdf>

- 1 Εγκύκλιος Γ2/61723/13-06-2002
- 2 Decision no. 77A/2002.
- 3 Εγκύκλιος 91190/Γ2/10-7-2008.
- 4 See <https://www.synigoros.gr/?i=human-rights.el.danews.33735>.
- 5 Εγκύκλιος Φ12/977/109744/Γ1/26-8-2008.
- 6 See https://www.synigoros.gr/resources/7083_4_thrisk14_11_2008.pdf.
- 7 Εγκύκλιος 133099/Γ2/10-09-2013.
- 8 <http://www.petheol.gr/nea/ypomnemataspethprostonypourgopaideias>
- 9 Εγκύκλιος 12773/Δ2/23-01-2015.
- 10 See "Αναγνωστοπούλου: Χωρίς αιτιολόγηση η απαλλαγή από τα Θρησκευτικά."
[Anagnostopoulou: No justification for exemption from Religious Education.], September 25, 2015, To Vima:
<http://www.tovima.gr/society/article/?aid=740572>
- 11 Yangazoglou, Stavros. 2011. "Τα Καινοτομικά στοιχεία του Νέου ΠΣ στα Θρησκευτικά" [The New School and the Innovative Features of the Program of Study in Religious Education]: http://e-theologia.blogspot.gr/2011/10/blogpost_7251.html
- 12 "Νέο Σχολείο: Οδηγός Εκπαιδευτικού στα Θρησκευτικά Δημοτικού-Γυμνασίου" [New School: Teacher's Guide for Religious Education in Primary School and Gymnasio]. Ministry of Education and Religions, Institute of Educational Policy. Revised edition, Athens 2014, p.88:
<http://blogs.sch.gr/gkapetanak/files/2015/10/Οδηγός-Εκπαιδευτικού-στα-Θρησκευτικά-Δημοτικού-Γυμνασίου-10.12.2014.pdf>
- 13 The initial creators of the New School (who were in charge of the subjects of Religion and History) had designed religious education as an elective class in the cluster of "Social Sciences", on the basis of the "Religious Studies" course of the International Baccalaureate. According to one of the initial creators, following reactions by the Orthodox Church, this version was eventually dropped. Education Minister Anna Diamantopoulou then assigned a new team to work on the New School program of religious education, which kept both the compulsory nature of the class and its emphasis on Christian Orthodoxy.
- 14 <http://www.cnn.gr/news/ellada/story/47439/theologoi-zitoun-paraitisi-fili-proeidopoioun-me-apoxi-apo-ti-didaskalia>
- 15 Though the Constitution does not explicitly state that such "religious consciousness" is based on the teachings of the Christian Orthodox Church, the main argument of those who oppose any changes to the class of religion is that this Article should be read in conjunction with Article 3 of the Constitution, which establishes the Orthodox Church as the "prevailing religion of the state" (See Markoviti, M. 2018, 'In-between the Constitution and the ECtHR: Mobilizations around Religion and Education in Greece', Politics and Religion).
- 16 <https://www.news.gr/politikh/esoterikh-politikh/article/260853/mystikh-synanthsh-tsipra-ieronimo-y-gia-filh-kai.html>
- 17 Decree 143575/Δ2/07-09-2016, ΦΕΚ Β 2920/13.09.2016 for primary and middle school (dimotiko and gymnasio) and Decree 143579/Δ2/07-09-2016, ΦΕΚ Β 2906/13.09.2016 for high school (lykeio).
- 18 <https://www.minedu.gov.gr/dimotiko-2/didaktea-yli-dimot/23968-28-09-16-odigies-efarmogis-ton-neonprogrammaton-spoudon-tou-mathimatos-ton-thrisko-ton-dimotiko-sto-gymnasio-kai-sto-lykeio-5>
- 19 <https://www.newsit.gr/politikh/kammenos-se-ieronimo-an-thes-na-rikso-tin-kyvernisi-tha-to-kano/1248031/>
- 20 <http://www.ekathimerini.com/226954/article/ekathimerini/news/court-deems-changes-to-school-religion-classes-unconstitutional>
- 21 <http://www.avgi.gr/article/10839/8786725/k-gabroglou-kratame-ton-pyrena-ton-protaseon-gia-ta-nea-programmataspoudon-tou-n-phile>

End of separate Sharia law for Muslims

BY ELLIOT FRIEDLAND

Mufti Ibrahim Serif in the Fillyra Mosque in Thrace. (Photo: Wikimedia Commons)

Clarion (11.02.2018) - <https://clarionproject.org/greece-end-sharia/> - The Greek Parliament adopted a new law that enables members of the country's Muslim community to have family and inheritance law judged before the Greek secular courts, rather than by Islamic sharia courts, reported The Guardian.

According to arrangements Greece made with Turkey in the Treaty of Sevres (1920) and Lausanne (1923), Muslims who became citizens of Greece after World War I were obligated to adjudicate matters of child custody, divorce and inheritance according to Islamic law. The treaties concerned two million people transferred between Greece and Turkey; both countries put into place laws that covered their minority population that remained in the countries.

The Greek Muslim community in question is roughly 110,000-120,000 strong and mainly resides in Thrace, in the east of the country on the border with Turkey.

Islamic religious courts will still exist, but will only be able to apply their rulings with the consent of all parties. Greece is the only country in the European Union with Islamic religious courts.

Prime Minister Alexis Tspiras hailed the vote as an "historic step" which "extended equality before the law to all Greeks." The bill was also supported by the opposition.

The timing of the case is political. A case was recently heard by the European Court of Human Rights involving this very same issue. The case was brought to the court by a 67-year-old Muslim widow, Hatijah Molla Salli from the city of Komotini in Western Thrace, who is involved in an inheritance dispute with her late husband's sisters.

She initially won her case in a Greek secular court, but the Greek Supreme Court overturned the ruling, saying that only a mufti from the Islamic court can determine inheritance law.

Commenting on the new legislation, Salli's lawyer Yannis Ktistakis said, "The government is only acting to prevent condemnation by the [European] court, which, as everyone knows, is inevitable."

'Historic step': Greek PM hails change to limit power of sharia law

New law allows minority to opt for Greece's secular legal system instead of Islamic law to resolve divorce, child custody and inheritance matters

AFP (10.01.2018) - <http://bit.ly/2AOIWoe> - Greece's Muslim minority will be able to resolve family disputes before Greek courts rather than under Islamic sharia law after the parliament on Tuesday changed a century-old legacy.

The prime minister, Alexis Tsipras, immediately called the vote an "historic step" as it "extended equality before the law to all Greeks".

The legislation will allow Muslim litigants to go before a Greek court for divorce, child custody and inheritance matters, rather than appealing to Islamic jurists known as muftis – a system that rights groups say frequently discriminates against women.

The issue has its origins in the period after the first world war, and treaties between Greece and Turkey that followed the collapse of the Ottoman empire.

The 1920 treaty of Sevres and the 1923 treaty of Lausanne stipulated that Islamic customs and Islamic religious law would apply to thousands of Muslims who suddenly became Greek citizens.

Greece's roughly 110,000-strong Muslim minority mainly lives in Thrace, a poor, rural region in the north-east bordering Turkey.

The parliament's move comes as the European Court of Human Rights is expected to rule this year on a complaint brought against Greece by a 67-year-old widow, Hatijah Molla Salli, who is locked in an inheritance dispute with her late husband's sisters.

When Salli appealed to Greek secular justice, she initially won her case. But the Greek supreme court in 2013 ruled that only a mufti had the power to resolve Muslim inheritance rights.

"The government is only acting to prevent condemnation by the court, which, as everyone knows, is inevitable," Salli's lawyer Yannis Ktistakis said in November.

At the time, Tsipras said: "As a European Union nation, this does not bestow honour upon us."

The issue is complicated by still-tense relations between traditional rivals Greece and Turkey.

Ankara takes a close interest in the Muslim community – which it sees as Turkish, although it also includes Pomaks and Roma – and frequently complains on its behalf to Athens, which considers it interference in Greece’s domestic affairs.

Athens admits that the Islam preached by the Thrace muftis is generally more moderate than the teachings of more hardline imams elsewhere in Europe.
